The link between biodiversity, food security, and health

The global COVID 19 pandemic is making visible the effects the destruction of ecosystems can have on human health. The International Climate Initiative has been addressing the conservation of biodiversity and, thus, of ecosystems since its inception in 2008. In 2019, the IKI approved 19 new projects related to biodiversity. All these projects have a clear goal: They want to address the causes of biodiversity loss and contribute to the conservation, restoration, and sustainable use of nature reserves.
